National Institutes of Health

If you are a recipient of NIH funding, you are required to report on scientific progress and financial expenditures. Submitting timely, accurate, and complete reports are an essential part of the stewardship of federally-supported research, and maintaining the public's trust in science.

NIH recently reminded award recipients of their reporting responsibilities in an NIH Guide notice (NOT-OD-17-074) summarizing the required information, and due dates, for Research Performance Progress Reports (RPPRs) and Financial Expenditure –Federal Financial Reports (FFRs).

Failure to submit complete and accurate reports doesn't just affect one individual – it can affect future funding to the entire organization, and can result in a delay of continued support.
